MAKE THE MOST OUT OF YOUR MEALS
Linda Rumsey, MS, RDN

Your lunch meal is designed to meet at least 1/3 of your nutrient requirements per day. Preparing meals at home to supplement the remaining nutrients need not be difficult. Frozen entrees, canned soups, and sandwiches are convenient and may offer a variety of healthy components, but it is still important to consume additional fruits, vegetables and dairy products every day. Choose canned fruits packed in juice or water and low sodium canned vegetables. Frozen fruits and vegetables often contain more nutrients than their fresh counterparts and are not restricted by the season. It is important to consume a total of 2-3 servings of low fat dairy products each day. Low fat yogurt, cottage cheese, calcium-fortified soy milk, and cheese are all great items to keep in your refrigerator. When choosing frozen or shelf stable meals read the label and make sure that there is no more than 600 mg of sodium, 4 grams of saturated fat, and no more than 10 to 18 grams of fat. You want the meals to have between 300 and 500 calories and 10 to 20 grams of protein. Some companies that provide a wide variety of healthier meals include Lean Cuisine, Healthy Choice, Weight Watcher's Smart Ones, Amy's, and Kashi. When choosing soup look for the words "Healthy", "Low Fat" and "Low Sodium" on the label. Sandwiches should be made with 100% whole grain bread, natural cheeses, low-sodium meats and natural peanut butter with no added sugar. The strategies described will help you choose the healthiest products, but it is still important to remember that you need to eat all the food groups each day for balanced nutrition.
