Eating for Eye Health
Linda Rumsey, MS,RDN

Eating the same foods that are good for your heart can also help preserve your eyes and vision. Keeping the capillaries healthy that supply the retina with nutrients is the key to eye health. In addition to an overall healthy diet there are certain nutrients that have been shown to be particularly important to this end. Lutein and zeaxanthin are two anti-oxidant carotenoids linked to lower risk of macular degeneration and cataracts. Great sources of these two compounds include kale, spinach, romaine lettuce, broccoli, and Brussels sprouts. Omega-3 Fatty acids, found primarily in fatty fish is also linked with better vision as we age. It has been shown that people who consumed fish high in omega-3s fatty acids often were less likely to have advanced age-related macular degeneration. The overall pattern of your diet may even be more important than single foods. Following a Mediterranean diet rich in fruits, vegetables, nuts, whole grains, fish and heart-healthy oil and low in refined carbohydrates, simple sugars, and salt seems to be the prescription for just about everything that ails us. Some researchers estimate that following a healthier diet could reduce the risk of macular degeneration by up to 20%.
