SPECTACULAR SPINACH

Linda Rumsey, MS, RDN

I often get the comment that we serve a lot of spinach on our menu. Spinach is such a nutritional super star we need to include it often so we can meet our vitamin and mineral requirements. The list of health promoting qualities contained in this vegetable is impressive. It is an excellent source of vitamins A, C, and K and the minerals manganese, magnesium, iron, calcium, and potassium. It is also rich in flavonoid compounds that function as antioxidants and as anti-cancer agents. The nutritional value for the calories (around 40 per cup) makes this a very nutrient dense food. Vitamin A and beta-carotene are important vision nutrients and lutein, a carotenoid found abundantly in spinach, has been shown to be protective against the progression of macular degeneration and for reducing the risk for cataracts. Beta-carotene may help to protect against certain types of cancer including skin, prostate, ovarian, breast and stomach. Vitamin K, calcium and magnesium are important nutrients essential for bone health. Magnesium also helps regulate nerve and muscle tone by balancing the action of calcium. Cardio vascular protection is provided by spinach. The ample supply of Vitamins C and A are powerful antioxidants that reduce the amount of free radicals in the body. These nutrients work as a team helping to prevent cholesterol from sticking to vessel walls where it can cause blocked arteries, heart attack or stroke. Iron is essential to health of the human body as it is vital to energy production and metabolism. Consuming dark, green leafy vegetables can significantly amp up the nutritional quality of the diet. So enjoy your spinach knowing that you are helping your body work and feel better!
